More than 500 new EVgo stalls to be added at Brixmor shopping centers across the U.S.

“Drivers across the U.S. want infrastructure options that integrate seamlessly into their routines, and shopping centers are an ideal place to get groceries, grab a bite or shop while charging,” said Scott Levitan, Executive Vice President, Growth at EVgo. “Expanding our partnership with Brixmor will help make EV charging even more accessible for drivers across the country while supporting the growing demand for public charging in everyday, convenient locations.”

The new Brixmor sites will feature up to 12 high-power EVgo chargers, an ideal fit for grocery store locations that the average American household visits 2-3 times per week.[1] Installing EV infrastructure not only provides convenience for drivers, but it also directly benefits nearby businesses by delivering increased foot traffic and customer spending.[2]

“At Brixmor, we're committed to ensuring our shopping centers continue to meet the evolving needs of our customers and communities,” said Laura McLaughlin, VP, Specialty Leasing, Brixmor Property Group. “Expanding EV charging infrastructure across our portfolio enhances convenience, supports growing consumer demand and reinforces our focus on creating vibrant destinations where people can seamlessly shop, dine and access everyday services.”

EVgo deployed its first charger with Brixmor in 2016 at a shopping center in Pleasanton, California.
